
ELIZABETH DEVITA-RAEBURN

Elizabeth was 14 when her only sibling, her older brother, Ted, died of aplastic anemia, a severe immune deficiency disorder. In her book The Empty Room: Surviving the Loss of a Brother or Sister at Any Age, she tells her story and the stories of some of the 77 bereaved siblings she interviewed.

She is a journalist, and holds a masters degree in public health from Columbia University. She writes primarily about science, health and society. Her stories have appeared in The Washington Post, Self, Glamour, Health, American Health, Psychology Today, Women's Health and Harper's Bazaar, among other publications. She lives and works in New York City with her husband, the writer Paul Raeburn.
